

As a socially responsible company, Kellogg has always been committed to responsible sourcing, including protecting animals. Even though we are a grain-based company and we use very few animal products in our foods, we embrace the important role we play in influencing responsible and sustainable behavior throughout our supply chain.

We are proud of our progress so far. In fact, we've been working to reduce our use of eggs from caged hens since 2007. And in 2015, we extended our U.S. commitments by: focusing further on cage-free eggs, closely examining the very small volume of pork we purchase and specifying key principles of animal welfare.

Sourcing Cage-Free Eggs

In most markets around the world where Kellogg uses egg products, we will work with our suppliers to source eggs from enriched colony hen housing or cage-free options by 2025. In some emerging markets, Kellogg may use a very small amount of egg products in biscuits or similar products. Agriculture practices vary greatly by region, so where there may be availability issues, we will prioritize purchasing eggs from suppliers, in line with our Supplier Code of Conduct, who have strict standards for animal welfare, food safety, labor and the environment.

- In Canada, the United States and Mexico: We are committed to phase in 100 percent cage-free eggs by 2025.
- In the rest of the world, specifically South America, Asia Pacific, Africa, Europe and Russia: Although we use a very limited amount of egg products in only some emerging markets in these regions, we are committed to sourcing eggs from enriched colony hen housing or cage-free options by 2025 where possible. Because we recognize that production practices and business operations vary widely throughout these regions, we will prioritize purchasing eggs from those suppliers who have strict standards for animal welfare, food safety, labor and the environment in markets where there may be availability issues,

Eliminating Gestation Stalls in Pork Production

We purchase a very small amount of pork in the U.S. only for some of our frozen breakfast sandwiches. We are committed to working with our pork suppliers to phase out the practice of housing pregnant sows in gestation stalls by the end of 2025. We understand that the development of alternative housing methods takes time, and we are committed to having productive conversations with our suppliers to establish the appropriate path forward.

Considering the Five Freedoms as Part of the Continuous Improvement of our Supply Chain

We agree with the aim of the internationally recognized Five Freedoms, as defined by the World Organization for Animal Health (OIE), and will consider them as part of our process of assessing changes in our ingredients supply chain:

- Freedom from hunger, thirst and malnutrition;
- Freedom from fear and distress;
- Freedom from physical and thermal discomfort;
- Freedom from pain, injury and disease; and
- Freedom to express normal patterns of behavior.

We're committed to continuously working with our suppliers to ensure their animals are properly cared for throughout their lives and we will regularly report on our progress.
